

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION AND SUGGESTION

This chapter consists of the conclusion from Chapter I to IV and the suggestion from the writer for the study program and the company.

5.1 Conclusion

Internships are not just about gaining new work experience. However, it also provides learning on how to deal with problems and find solutions. Not everyone finds solutions easily in every problem faced, but with internships, feedback, reviews can also be a lesson that we get indirectly. Internships are not only about getting what you are taught, but internships also aim to provide us with learning from experiences, mistakes, and solutions that we find ourselves.

The author is an English Literature student at Ma Chung University who chose to do an internship at Translation Transfer, a translation company that has been trusted by many companies and clients. The author chose Translation Transfer as her internship company because this company teaches more in-depth about the real translation process. It was not easy for the author to join the internship from the beginning because the author faced many obstacles in managing time and it was difficult to balance between internship activities and campus activities. However, the author has given her best in this internship and gave good results for campus, and of course, for herself in the future in the workforce and education. Not only that, but the author also learned a lot besides the problems written in the report, such as how to make decisions wisely and manage time as well as possible despite having quite a lot of activities.

5.2 Suggestion

For the English literature program, English is studied at the English Department at Ma Chung University. This study program focuses on young learners, but writers can still apply what they learn from the course to the internship program. Therefore, it is suitable for students to do an internship program and learn new things in the world of translation. In this opportunity, the author can apply the theories obtained in a workplace situation and not only receive formal education.

As in Translation Transfer, internships are not only about how we see the world of work, but we can also learn something in it. Therefore, it is better if we pay more attention to what we have been taught, ask more questions, and communicate as well as possible with our mentors. Regarding communication, the author suggests that in the future at the internship site, students can communicate more and not wait for answers to questions that we really want to ask. There is nothing wrong if internship students ask first or start conversations first about the material or topics discussed.

For the future, hopefully students, campuses, and any internship companies will work well together, and hopefully for the future, the author can get more lessons in any case, both in terms of material (from what has been written in this report), as well as experiences in the future.
